“ We always ran into each other at the grocery store or Dollar general, and would have 30 to 45 min conversations, wether about the kids, life or when we were in school, he always had a smile on his face, even when he started going through. He was a very nice guy. Rip classmate.

“ What I remember the most and it was kind of funny if you look at it now. Is when before I have my daughter my neighbors next door I've been he never complained about my music for the neighbor across from it did and I complain about his the way we were. Well I did not know Frank was over there he can do in a wedding and Mambo number five come on I had learned surround sound big speakers and he calls me up I hear it come across the scanner. I'm like oh no I turned it down and turn it off he says I got a call he says I heard you playing music loud I might already have been on all night or something like that I could get exactly how it was I think I started having it on all night but I was part of it when my daughter cuz I remember that now. But I was at Daddy's shop when he on the tire shop and all that not there inside the lake whatever it's called I can't remember and like two or three days later you know you lied to me the other night by three nights to go overnight it was I was like what do you mean he said when I called you and told you to turn your music down you said you weren't playing it I'm like I what he said yeah you are you know how I know I'm like huh cuz I was next door eating I like oh no I'm just glad I didn't get a ticket that's the kind of person it's like I was we laughed about it cuz he knew I think that I knew and you but this is where we were I mean ain't never had much complaints cuz she's never already heard it until that night and I miss you Frank. You're a good guy and I hope to see you in heaven. Is my daughter called you her Uncle Frank and I always thought of you as my younger brother. And I mean when you babysat her and she cried you just went on to sleep and all the other little good times but I'm not going to put them all on here rest in peace Frank
