“ Jason was one of the most genuine, kind, funny, and intelligent people I have met, and a wise old soul.

Jason and I bonded over many of our very similar thoughts and beliefs. As soon as we met the conversations were just effortless and so enjoyable, I found myself missing him if even just a few days went by and I didn't hear from him. I spoke with him last on the morning he was leaving Key West to drive to Georgia, and the last thing he said to me was "I'll text you as soon as I get back".

Sadly, that text never came.

Now, I wander around my house feeling bewildered at the lack of his presence, constantly still picking up my phone to check to see if I've heard from him and having to remind myself over and over again that that text isn't coming.

I then start talking to him anyway, out loud like a crazy person, so he can hear me wherever he is. I will never stop talking to him.

I take comfort in knowing that he is still out there somewhere, smiling, hanging out by the water, waiting for us to someday join him.

“ When we were young, Jason was one of the silliest people I know. He had this gift of being able to crack a joke, often at his own expense, to make people laugh. The thing I remember most about Jason was that if he knew you were hurting or sad, he wanted to make it better. Even though I grew up in the country, I never learned to bait a hook, and one evening at camp, Jason PATIENTLY helped me learn to bait and cast, and from that point on, I've been able to do it myself, and taught my children. Jason and I share experiences as 68 Whiskey's (combat medic), artists, and friends of Bill. He will be sadly missed.
