“ John and I meet when we were 17. We would go to Dunedin beach and look for shell. I would read poetry to him by Walter Rinder. We would go to a place on a big rock called the moon at night. One night we wrecked his dad’s car and we had to tell him and I was very afraid his dad would be mad at us. We eventually went our separate ways but he found me on Facebook about 2 years ago. We communicated via text but I never got to see him again. His death shocked me. He was a very good father and grandfather. I am just heartbroken about his passing. Trying to find some kind of closure at this point. It’s not easy. 😞

“ John and his son Jesse (along with his “third son” Jarret who pitched in on occasion) installed a new deck for me this past spring. Over the 2 weeks they spent here they all became like family. John was just a genuine soul. In those short 2 weeks I learned his life story and the love he had for his family was beyond evident. I will be thinking about his family during this difficult time. I’m grateful for meeting John and know he will be missed by so many.
