“ I remember Julian. My family moved to a house at the corner of Adams and Boland Streets sometime after my sixth birthday. There was a small community of boys on Adams and Spring Streets who were my age. Julian was one year older and a lot wiser.

In the summer, we all wore shorts and, for a while went bare footed. I don't remember Julian in shorts, but I remember the day he taught me how to make a sling shot from a forked stick and an old inner tube. When you cut pieces from rubber you can never get a straight line. His advice was to look for the nicks you made on the rubber and cut them out with a small moon shape to prevent that tear from getting wider and tearing completely across the band.

It certainly the little things in life that you remember people by.

I wish the best for Julian's family and relatives.

It is great to remember things from "way back then," Malcolm. Now some days I can't remember what I did yesterday!!! Surely I am not getting "old"!!! I will miss Julian. His dad was my father's barber & my dad would always say, " please cut out all the gray"!!
